TULANE UNIVERSITY

The Office of Government and Community Relations works for all Tulane campuses to advance the university's mission by monitoring federal, state and local legislation and government activities. To reach the office, call 504-988-3390 or check the website, tulane.edu/government_affairs.

The futures of Tulane University and New Orleans have been intertwined since the founding of Tulane in 1834, when a group of doctors came together to battle yellow fever and “to lead the advancement of science and the rational treatment of disease.” Another calamity, Hurricane Katrina in 2005, forged an even stronger relationship between Tulane and its home city, as a culture of public service inspired the university’s students, staff and faculty to reach out to the city’s neighborhoods, schools and citizens.

That partnership between the city and its anchor institution, a national research university, enhances the well-being and growth of the Crescent City, even as new generations of Tulane students and employees are drawn here to study, teach and perform research.

FOUR WAYS TULANE MAKES AN IMPACT

PARTNERING FOR A SAFER CITY

Estimated annual value: Nearly $1 million

Most universities patrol their campus areas, but the Tulane University Police Department (TUPD) has expanded its 24-hour patrol to a one-mile perimeter around its uptown campus, from Carrollton Avenue to Jefferson Avenue and from St. Charles Avenue to Fontainebleau Drive. The department has 100 officers who are full time, post-certified and commissioned, with arrest powers. TUPD partners with the New Orleans Police Department for Carnival and other special events throughout the city.

BUILDING AN EDUCATED COMMUNITY

Annual scholarships to New Orleans-area students: $27.4 million

Tulane partners with the Posse Foundation to train young leaders from urban high schools. The Posse Foundation begins working with students while they are in high school and sends them in teams, or posses, to top colleges across the United States. Posse identifies urban public high school students who are often overlooked by the traditional admissions process. Tulane provides Posse scholars with four-year, full tuition scholarships. The first Posse NOLA group graduated in May 2015. There are currently 27 students from New Orleans area high schools participating in the scholarship program. City employees qualify for a 50 percent tuition discount for School of Continuing Studies undergraduate classes. And statewide, Tulane annually awards $40.6 million in scholarships.

SUPPORTING STRONG AND VIBRANT NEIGHBORHOODS

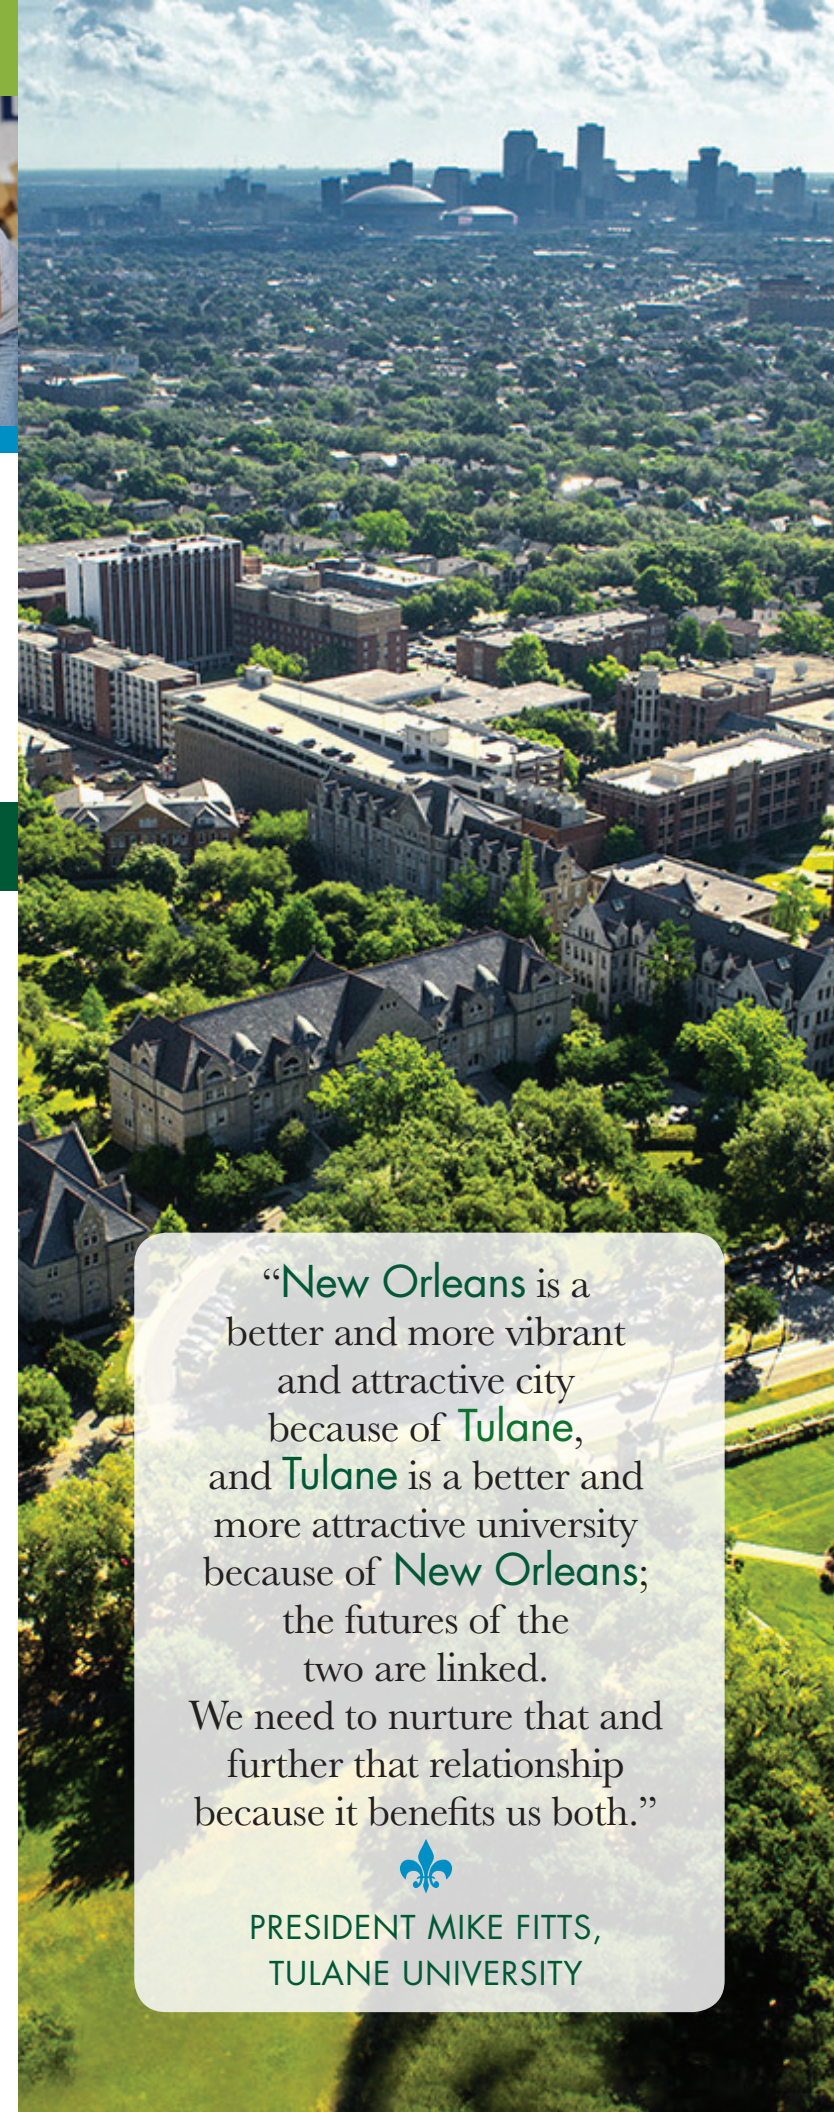

More than 540,000 service hours in 2014 by university students

Community outreach is ingrained in the culture at Tulane University, and all undergraduate students must complete the university’s public service requirements before graduation. The Center for Public Service supports a university curriculum and research agenda by uniting academics and action. The center maintains partnerships with over 400 community-based organizations, from schools to hospitals to neighborhood associations. Outreach work by students connects back to classroom agendas in a variety of disciplines.

SPURRING INNOVATION AND JOB GROWTH

Reconnecting Opportunity Youth: $380,000

Through Tulane University and its Cowen Institute, a pilot program is under way to address the needs of the Opportunity Youth population in the city, helping them build pathways to sustainable careers in high-growth industries. Through the Earn and Learn Career Pathways Program, opportunity youth receive intensive career-focused technical and academic skills training at partner Delgado Community College, combined with paid Tulane apprenticeships and the promise of post-program assistance in connecting to additional education and workforce placements.

“New Orleans is a better and more vibrant and attractive city because of Tulane, and Tulane is a better and more attractive university because of New Orleans; the futures of the two are linked. We need to nurture that and further that relationship because it benefits us both.”
