What is the Newcomb College Institute?

Newcomb College Institute (NCI) is a dynamic center that supports women’s education at Tulane University. Through interdisciplinary programming emphasizing academic enrichment, career preparedness, and leadership development, NCI offers an array of opportunities, including:

• Twelve Newcomb student organizations
• Student Grants for undergraduate women interested in doing community service, conducting independent research, attending academic conferences, and completing unpaid internships
• Internationally renowned speakers to talk to students about the exciting work they’re doing in science, business, the arts, politics and beyond
• Opportunities to learn about new media through Collat Media Internships
• Events to network with women alums in your chosen field

Do you need to visit a library or museum to conduct academic research?

Are you participating in an academic conference?

Are you involved with a local organization working to rebuild New Orleans?

If you need funding for projects like these, the Newcomb Grant Program might be able to help.

Undergraduate women-identified students enrolled full-time at Tulane University can apply for funding to support a variety of academic projects.

For details, visit the Newcomb College Institute Web site: tulane.edu/newcomb/grants.cfm

Application deadline for fall cycle: November 1

Funds available spring and summer 2015
What are you doing for lunch this Friday?

Join us on Fridays in the Anna Many Lounge in the Caroline Richardson Building for these lectures paired with lunch from a local restaurant. Talks usually last from 12-1 p.m. This lecture series provides students a chance to learn more about academic disciplines that differ from their major area of study in an informal setting. Check us out online for this semester’s schedule of speakers.
